A LITTLE STORY

You swat away some vines hanging from an ancient tree. In the clearing you can see him—a man dressed in khakis and an explorer’s hat—examining some berries off a nearby plant.

You walk over to him, careful to not disturb any wildlife that might be daydreaming beneath your feet. The man swings around, standing up to greet you.

“Did you stray from the group again? I was worried about you!” he says. “We’re just about to start our scavenger hunt.”

Explorer Tom hands you a pair of binoculars, some rope, a canteen, and a neatly packed snack.

“You’ll need all of these for the hunt, yes,” he says. To your surprise, he then hands you a laptop and motions you to sit down on a nearby tree stump.

“What’s this for?” you ask, confused. Binoculars, rope, a canteen, and a laptop? Explorer Tom laughs.

“It’s your scavenger hunt, of course!” He adjusts the hearing aid in his left ear and crouches next to you.

“If the scavenger hunt is on the laptop, why do I need all these other things?” you ask, gesturing to the other supplies.

Explorer Tom leans in and whispers, “It makes us look cool. Plus, you’ll need that snack for later. Huntin’ makes you hungry!”
